Gaete premieres two large diptychs, “White Space - The Root of All Dark” and “Black Space - The Root of All Light”, inaugurating the newest room to open in Dam, Stuhltrager’s renovated expansion.

Budding from the paths and pathos of data as it transcends to and from nonsense to clarity, Gaete’s drawings map the abstract process of communication. Reminiscent of the night sky, a calculus teacher’s busy chalkboard, cells dividing under a microscope or an accountant’s figurations at tax time, the drawings are detailed surveys of how knowledge is formed and conveyed. Fleeting and emerging lines, letters, patterns and numbers suggest infinite routes traveled, not a static or single isolated moment.

“Everything can be reduced to lines and dots. Their placement in space is the root of all data and represents the evolution of how we code and/or communicate information.” I. Gaete about the artist: Born in Santiago, Chile Gaete currently lives in Brooklyn, NY. After his last inclusion into a group exhibit at Dam, Stuhltrager in 2004, Gaete was chosen to be represented by the gallery. “Black and White” is Gaete’s first solo exhibit.
